Glee's Chris Colfer | EX MEAN BOY?

“ [To] the kids that our show celebrates, who are constantly told no by...bullies at school, that they can't be who they are.”

—Chris Colfer, Glee actor

When Chris Colfer warily accepted the Golden Globe for his portrayal of Glee's gay character Kurt, he dedicated it to his young fans who also get picked on. But an insider reveals to Star that Chris wasn't always such a caring young performer: When he was 10, he joined the Good Company Players theater group in Fresno, Calif. — and quickly made his presence known: “Chris likes to play the extremes,” says the insider. “But back then he'd throw tantrums if he didn't get certain roles.” And it seems Chris learned to act this way from his own mother, Karen: “She was a terror,” adds the insider. “She bullied people to make sure Chris was the star of every production. If he wasn't, she'd go ballistic. They never once apologized for their bad behavior.”

She claims she looks eternally young thanks to vitamins and a healthy diet, but when Suzanne Somers, 64, appeared on a Canadian talk show Jan. 19 to promote her new book, Sexy Forever, her “youth face” told a different story: NYC-based plastic surgeon Dr. Norman M. Rowe tells Star, “It looks like Suzanne had a cheek-enhancement procedure done, either surgically with implants or with fillers like Juvederm. This usually helps sagging cheeks. She may have also had her lips enhanced with a filler to plump them up. She looks great for her age!”
