Kim proudly declares that her famous curves are natural, but admits to OK! "When you look at pictures, there's always something you can improve on."

THEY'RE STARTING SO YOUNG

These days, even stars in their 20s are turning to plastic surgery. "A-listers are starting to do little 'tune-ups' at an earlier age, so they don't need a major overhaul when they are in their 40s or 50s," explains Dr. Norman M. Rowe.*

"We've had some girls from Project Runway," confides Dr. Ryan. "They come in their 20s to get little fillers beneath their eyes." "Fillers are big," agrees Dr. Steven Dayan.* Now used differently, he says: "We used to put it in the folds around the mouth, and now we're putting it in the cheeks."

Fillers like Juvéderm and Restylane — which can now last two to three years — aren't the only proven products being used in new ways. "Botox is now being used in micro-doses throughout the face," explains Dr. Dayan. "It's no longer being placed in the muscles to give that frozen look. Tiny little droplets make the skin look healthier, fuller, reduce the appearance of pore size and reduce acne breakouts."

A CURE FOR CELLULITE?

Kim tried laser cellulite treatment VelaShape to smooth her thighs, buttocks and abdomen in 2007. "Vela-Shape is basically a non-surgical device that massages the needed area and stimulates the blood circulation so that it minimizes cellulite," Kim explains. "Before the Oscars, we see a lot of stars for VelaShape so they fit into their dress," says Dr. Payman Simoni*.

FRESH-FACED

As a makeup-free teenager, Kim didn't need shortcuts to look flawless.

IN THE SPOTLIGHT

Her curves were already famous the year before Keeping Up With the Kardashians debuted.

* Dr. Norman M. Rowe, Dr. Steven Dayan and Dr. Payman Simoni are offering their own medical opinions, but have not personally treated any of the stars in this story.
